Yes ... first of all, Mom overpaid for insurance, so essentially she is paying for the Corolla insurance. And secondly, dad intended to give the car to mom for the extra safety features

Thanks Huy. I didn't know that Mom was interested in driving another car?

Also, I should mention that there is no remaining service contract for the Corolla. Dad bought a two-year contract that has already expired.

Hi Hanh,

We dropped off the Corolla at Mom's house for her use as long as she wants/needs it. Mainly, it has a rear camera that's a great safety feature.

Here are a few other details so that we together can help Mom to use and maintain this car.

* Navigation: It does not have a built-in mapping system. Mom simply needs to plug in her iPhone to the lightning cable in the car, then use the phone's Maps program. It takes about 15 seconds after plugging in the phone for it to "connect" to the car, which seems long to me, but otherwise it's easy and completely automatic.

* Maintenance. The odometer is currently at 8,600 miles and just got an oil change using high quality synthetic oil. So, it should not need much maintenance at all till the odometer reads 28,000 miles. I think I can help mom with other maintenance as needed, such as tire pressure and air filter.
