Thinking about this, all of our efforts since January did result in our having a much clearer picture of dad's health, mental, financial, legal, housing, and social situation.

If something happens to him, we have more to go off because he's so uncommunicative.

We don't have Analise anymore to get him to respond to calls. But we have Ken, Jeff and Vien.

The truth is somewhere in his email. Hard to say which part is posturing because of his eviction and what's real.

I'm sure he's doing irrational things. Like I told you yesterday, I was in an important meeting yesterday and he called 4 times. I sent his calls to voicemail because I had to concentrate. He called right back again like it was an emergency. It turns out he was at T-Mobile because he wanted a separate account even though I'm paying for his phone. I think he wound up getting a new line. I got a message on his Apple account asking if I wanted to add a new number for FaceTime calls on the iPad I've set up as a backup for him. I sent him a text to ask about he actually opened my text but didn't reply.

Hanh - you've done what you can with offering to fly him back. He hasn't opened your emails or texts. He is where he wants to be. We just need to be at peace with it.

Hi Mark, your Dad seems to be exhibiting signs of Alzheimer's. Some days he seems okay, but other days he's really out of it! That's my observation. Also he brought back that woman, Annalise, who your Dad told police several weeks ago that she has Dementia. And both last night and tonight she left a burner on, on the kitchen stove after she had gone to bed. I discovered that when I went into the kitchen around 10PM tonight and about the same time last night. She never cleans anything and leaves all the pots and pans and dishes dirty. Your Dad used to keep everything clean and also clean the kitchen table after he ate, but he no longer does that. Elise everything a mess, which he did not used to do! Question: Do you have Power of Attorney over your Dad? He appears as if he is becoming incompetent and Analise's dementia and forgetfulness is becoming a danger to the safety of everyone here as well as to this property! The shrubs and weeds on the side of the house are all overgrown. I would trim it myself but your dad has no tools to do that. So again do you have power of attorney? Thanks! Ken Van Natta
