Do you know how is Dr. Pelligrino is transferring care to Dad's primary doctor? Have you had contact?

Based on Dad's outbursts, it sounds like he needs psychiatric support. That's what happened last time.

Hi Mark, this is Dr. Pellegrino calling. You don't need to call me back. Unless you didn't get the information you need from my phone call. Just briefly as you know, I decided he could make his own decisions when it's obvious. I'm willing to do that and it seemed very obvious on the day I saw him. So. Number two. I'm not sure if he's eating enough. A lot of patients like this who are borderline. We send them home hoping that they'll eat better at a more home environment. They perceive as home. So I'm hoping he continues to eat better in a couple of weeks. I'm going to want his primary doctor to check blood test. So please make sure that gets done just to make sure he's not getting dehydrated. I literally think of the one in ten chance. He's going to be dehydrated every now and then if somebody like this doesn't eat. Well we have to admit them to the hospital ... I'm hoping they'll be okay. I did blood tests here and they're kind of fine. He's got some mild chronic kidney disease. So it's hard to tell based on his blood test if he's hydrated well or not but he seems to be doing okay. So that's about it. I made some adjustments to his medicine. So call me if you have any further questions, or if there's anything unclear 714-734-5500. Thanks a lot, bye-bye now.
