Not good.

Btw. Did you see the tab in the password spreadsheet with Dad's accounting of his assets? I took a picture of his scrawl and also typed up to what he told me. I'm sure it's only a starting point.

Last night, I found a proper gift letter from Jessica's mortgage company signed by Dad. He signed it a couple of months after the money transfer. At the time of the transfer, he had signed a gift letter that wasn't legally binding.

So, if Jessica kept a copy of that gift letter, I think he can kiss the $60K good bye.

I have been very busy fixing Chipper. Will be able to provide an accurate snapshot of his financial situation in about two weeks, when I'm more freed up.
